In Genesis 26, when Isaac was about to move to greener pastures in Egypt because of a great famine, God gave him an incredible promise: “Stay where you are, and I will bless you here.” So, despite the hardships, Isaac obeyed, planted his grain, and was supernaturally blessed with a hundredfold harvest that brought him great wealth and livestock. But the Philistines got so jealous of Isaac that they filled in his wells, and the king told him he had to move away. It wasn’t fair, but Isaac knew God’s promise that a greater blessing remained.

Here is the key: You can be in God’s will and face opposition, but if you keep doing the right thing, God will take you to something greater. When we face disappointments and setbacks, it is easy to get discouraged and give up on what we are believing for. But sometimes you need to pass through injustice to discover the open door to what He has promised. You cannot see it, but it is all a part of His plan to bring you into an abundant place; something bigger than you have ever imagined.

Genesis 26:12 “When Isaac planted his crops that year, he harvested a hundred times more grain than he planted, for the Lord blessed him.”
