

The Israelites had been in slavery for hundreds of years. That was the land of barely enough. They were just surviving, barely making it through. One day God brought them out of slavery and took them into the desert, the land of just enough. Their needs were supplied, but nothing extra. God eventually took them into the Promised Land, the land of more than enough. The food and supplies were plenteous. It's called "the land flowing with milk and honey". Flowing means it didn't stop. Its abundance never ran out. That is where God is taking you.

You may be in the land of barely enough or just enough right now, but don't worry because God hasn't forgotten about you. He is saying, "These are seasons. You are passing through." God has a "Promised Land" for you. He has a place of superabundance, of more than enough, where it's flowing with provision, not just once, but ongoing.

Leviticus 20:24 "...You will possess their land; I will give it to you as an inheritance, a land flowing with milk and honey..."
