

The city of Jericho, which was surrounded by a huge stone wall so thick that chariots could ride on top, was the last city that stood between the people of Israel and the Promised Land. God told Joshua to have the people march around the walls once a day for six days, and seven times on the seventh day. It wouldn't have been so difficult if, while they were walking, they saw a little crack in the wall or a shift in the foundation, but day after day nothing happened. They didn't understand it, but just kept doing the right thing, and the final time around, the walls came tumbling down.

Too often we will only stay in faith if we see the 'wall cracking'. We will keep believing if our employer starts treating us better, if the promotion goes through, if things start to improve. You may not get a sign. You need to keep thanking God even though nothing is improving, keep walking by faith and not sight, and suddenly the 'walls' will come down.

Joshua 6:4 "Seven priests will walk ahead of the Ark, each carrying a ram's horn. On the seventh day you are to march around the town seven times, with the priests blowing the horns."
