

You may have a lot of questions about why certain things have happened in your life. Perhaps you went through a breakup, and you are hurt, wondering if you will ever be happy again. Think about this: An exclamation mark is simply a question mark straightened out. If you would like God to turn your question marks, the things you don't understand, into exclamation marks, you need to trust Him. Instead of wondering why something happened, dare to say: "God, I know that I will see Your goodness in this because You are still on the throne. I may not understand this valley I am in, but I know that on the other side is my exclamation mark. I am confident and expectant that a fresh anointing is coming with increase, promotion, and a new level."

If you keep moving through the dark places like that, honouring God, you will see that question mark turned into an exclamation mark. God will amaze you with His goodness, grace and mercy. Stay in faith. God has an exclamation mark waiting for you.

Psalm 27:13 "I remain confident of this: I will see the goodness of the LORD in the land of the living."
