

Your friends should be sharpening you, making you better. Is that true of your circle of friends? Whatever qualities your friends have, either good or bad, eventually will either dull you or sharpen you. If you spend time with people who gossip, who compromise, or who are stingy, that is what you will become. But if you spend time with excellent people, generous people, and motivated, successful people, those good qualities will in turn sharpen your life. This is why it is so important that you are very selective with whom you spend your time.

Don't worry about being in the right group, having the most friends, being the most popular. The quantity of friends is not important; it is the quality of your friends that really matters. You need eagles in your life - people who inspire you to reach your dreams, people who motivate you to go further, people who make you better. The truth is that you cannot reach your highest potential on your own. You need the right people to help you get to where you are supposed to be.

Proverbs 27:17 "As iron sharpens iron, so a friend sharpens a friend."
