

In the Bible, Job's life was suddenly shattered by great personal losses as well as a devastating illness. Although Job honoured God with all of his life, he experienced a difficult test of his faith that he didn't understand. Maybe, like Job, you feel like a shadow of what you used to be. At one time you were healthy and strong, but now you are weak and tired from fighting an illness. At one time you were blessed in your business, but now you are barely making it. Or at one time you had a great marriage, but now you are just trying to keep it together.

However, Job's story did not end there, and neither will yours. God eventually turned it around and brought Job out with twice what he had before. After the heartache, after the loss, after the sickness, after the divorce, you are going to see years of health, happiness, and favour to where you don't look back and dwell on what you have been through. Bad breaks are not your destiny; double is coming.

Job 17:7 "My eyes are swollen with weeping, and I am but a shadow of my former self."
