

God never said that believers wouldn't have difficulties. Being a person of faith doesn't exempt us from challenges and unfair situations. That is part of this life. We live in an imperfect world. The promise in today's Scripture verse is not that you won't have difficulties, but that God will bring you out of "them all". When you are in the adversity, your attitude should be: "I am coming out. This sickness is temporary. This trouble is not the end. This addiction is not permanent. This difficulty in my career is just for a season."

Right now, you may not be able to see it, but God is in the adversity with you and is in the process of bringing you out. You are not going to come out the same. You are going to come out stronger, free from things that were holding you back, with a greater trust in God, a greater confidence, a greater faith. That is getting you prepared for the next level of your pre-ordained destiny in Christ. With every experience, something is deposited in you that you are going to use further down the road.

Psalm 34:19 "Many hardships and perplexing circumstances confront the righteous, but the LORD rescues him from them all."
