

When you are secure in who God made you to be, you don't feel less-than because you cannot do what somebody else does. God has given each of us different gifts. You don't feel inferior because your friend is a doctor and you don't have a University degree. Your security is not in how you perform, in what you do, what you wear, or what title is behind your name. Your security is in the fact that you are a child of Almighty God. You realize you are His masterpiece, fearfully and wonderfully made, equipped, empowered, approved, and anointed.

You find your value in who you are, and not what you do. Otherwise, you will spend your whole life competing with others, trying to prove your importance, and trying to convince them to be for you. "Look at my car. Look at the business I have built. Look at my position." That is all fine, but it is superficial. Be the best you can be, stay focused on what you are called to do, do it well, and live for God's applause.

Romans 12:6 "In His grace, God has given us different gifts for doing certain things well."
