

Keeping promises is an incredibly important aspect of maintaining a healthy and secure relationship. That applies to all forms of relationships, whether it be romantic, professional, or parental. Broken promises can lead to trust rupturing, which can very quickly fracture a relationship.

If you are suffering the pain of ruptured trust, here is a comforting fact: God always keeps His promises to His people. Even when we don't know how He can do it, we can trust Him because of the fidelity of His nature. He Himself is our confidence. He "is not slack concerning His promise". (2 Peter 3:9)

Remember, it is important to read the Bible carefully, taking every promise in its context. We should never twist God's words to mean whatever we want. When we have accurately understood one of His promises, we can stand on it and rejoice with confidence!

Psalms 118:8; Proverbs 3:26; 14:26 "It is better to trust in the Lord than to put confidence in Man.... For the Lord will be your confidence.... In the fear of the Lord there is strong confidence."
